Apple iBook "Snow" Edition

The Apple iBook "Snow" edition is a version of the iBook laptop computer that was released in 2001 at a price of $1299. It was so called due to its white color scheme. It featured a 12.1-inch TFT display and was powered by a PowerPC G4 processor. It had a built-in trackpad, built-in Ethernet, and an optional airport card for wireless networking. It came with Mac OS X pre-installed, which was a significant change from the iBooks before that ran Mac OS 9.

The iBook Snow edition was well-received for its design and performance, and was popular among students and consumers for its portability and affordability.
