Administrative/Biographical Data

Macon Junior College began in 1967, the 167-acre campus became home to more than 1,600 trees, 2,500 shrubs and 12,000 ground cover plants. Landscape architect Clay Adamson, who retired as plant operations director from the Medical College of Georgia, made the original plant selection. Joseph White Jr., the director of Plant Operations when Macon Junior College opened, supervised the careful planting of the large order, most of which came from a nursery in Dalton, Ga.

Viewing the development 30 years later, Dr. Barnes was inspired by the potential he saw for an expanded horticultural display and approached then-MSc president Dr. Aaron Hyatt on developing the campus into a showcase for native plants and other specimens that have adapted to the region.

Scope and Content

A collection documenting administrative records for the operation, planning, and maintenance of the gardens. Information also includes various Spring and Fall Symposium events with accompanying speaker information, research materials from garden societies and conferences, as well as correspondence between facilities staff to vendors and support members.

The Botanical Gardens, a nationally registered garden, consisted of 16 different garden plots throughout the campus marked by plaques with descriptive information. These plots have since changed with some falling to the wayside. Photos of the campus, along with newspaper articles about Dr. Barnes' interactions on campus are within the collection. A list of donated horticulture books and documents of the 2008 Mother's Day tornado are also included.
